

Client 2 is a feminine individual born on March 20, 1987, originally from Syria and currently holding recognized refugee status (Permit B-FL) in Switzerland, where she has resided for nine years. She is married and the primary caregiver for her three minor children and her husband, who is mostly at home due to illness, placing the majority of household and childcare responsibilities on her shoulders. Her formal education is limited to the completion of the 6th year of primary school in Syria, with no further qualifications or professional training. Linguistically, she has basic proficiency in formal German (A1), speaks Arabic at an intermediate level (B1), and is highly proficient in Kurdish (C1), but has no knowledge of Swiss German. She has neither previous work experience in Switzerland nor abroad and has not held any formal employment positions. Her soft skills include patience and basic communication, shaped by her family circumstances, while she currently possesses no IT skills and has only recently begun driving lessons. Health limitations prevent her from carrying more than 15 kilograms due to a previous pregnancy complication. Cultural restrictions preclude her from working in restaurants or bars in serving roles, she is uncomfortable working closely with men, and she must be available at home during early mornings and evenings to care for her children. Financially, she needs to earn at least CHF 5,500 per month to support her family, and her commuting options are restricted to a maximum of 30 minutes from her place of residence by public transport. She has not completed any German language or integration courses, and no prior integration costs have been recorded.
